Hello-

I am retiring from the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service August 31. That is hard for me to say.

When I was 16 years old living in Connecticut I knew I wanted to be a biologist, and after coming to grips with the fact that the public sector was where it's at, I thought about working for a state wildlife agency. Then I thought, wouldn't it be cool if there was a federal fish and game? That's who I'd want to work for, living in the west with a beautiful wife and 2.3 children (dogs, cats, herps), working on cool conservation projects. Turns out I was lucky, and I have truly been living the dream for the last 30 years.

So why give it up? First, I never intended to be a government employee for an entire career, but I just did, and at age 54 that career is now mostly behind me. And second, it's because I had another dream. When I was 23 I shot my first elk, and when I told my parents, they said, "but you're supposed to save wildlife!" Since then I realized hunter/anglers and non-hunter/anglers are too often apart when they shouldn't be. My dream was to occupy a space in between where a shared interest in conservation lives. To do so, I plan to reinvigorate my active support for bringing all types of conservationists together. And I plan to walk the talk by hunting and fishing and birding and hiking and rafting and camping a lot more!

I realize that I will always love you and the work and the agency we make, and if I waited for a time when I didn't love you, I would never leave. This makes leaving very difficult for me. I hope you will continue to give me all the love and support you can for the next four weeks, and beyond.

Yours truly,

Ted
